TWO UNCONVENTIONAL KINGS

STROLLS ABOUT LONDON OF THE QUEEN MOTHER'S BROTHERS.

George of Greece and Frederick of Denmark went about in Ordinary Dress. No Record Secured of King Edward's Voice—The Thrilling Aerial Race—English Hotel Charges Going to Nine—Cecil Sorel Compares Men and Lions—French Duellists—Berlin's Starchiest and Most Miserly Citizen—Riding Constantinople of Its Dogs.

LONDON, May 25.—Scotland Yard breathed a sigh of relief at the departure of the crowned heads of Europe who attended King Edward's funeral. Although anarchists make it a rule to be everywhere in England, their only haven of refuge, yet remembering the bomb outrages in Lisbon and Madrid the police could not take chances.

The special officer was attached to each monarch, and in most cases he was assisted by two or more other detectives, all of whom would have found their task much easier had not the sovereigns refused to regard any risk to themselves as serious or even existent.

Perhaps George of Greece and Frederick of Denmark, both brothers of Queen Alexandra, were safest from regicidal attempts. In ordinary sack suits and black derby hats they walked about freely or drove in taxicabs, with their guards always in hot pursuit.

The King of Greece went away by himself one day exploring populous South London, and his bodyguard lost him in the crowd and recovered him as he was coming out of a small cigar shop smoking a fourpenny pipe. The girl who served him had no idea who the benign elderly gentleman was.

Despite lingering about Buckingham Palace gates in the hope of seeing royalty in their gold and purple trappings were often deceived by two plainly dressed elderly men whom they mistook for minor officials as they strolled quietly out of the palace. Much to their amusement the two Kings were continually questioned about the day's doings. They always stopped and replied courteously, thoroughly enjoying the situation, but their faithful shadowers did not enjoy the joke so much.

As has been recorded already, neither the new King nor the Queen is credited with any liking for what is called the smart set. It is now recalled that last autumn Queen Mary was staying at a house party in the country which included three or four members of the ultra smart set, whose conversation at dinner was also ultra smart. The Princess, as she then was, participated very little in it. Afterward, when the ladies were in the drawing room, the Princess opened a workbag, drew from it a woollen sock and, taking her stand on the hearthrug, proceeded to knit.

For over an hour she remained stock still, almost absorbed, in her work, and when she stood the ultra smart ladies, whose usual form would be liqueurs and cigarettes, had to stand too, until they were absolutely dead beat. The Queen, who resembles her great-grandmother, Queen Charlotte, so closely in appearance, has also, curiously enough, inherited the taste of that somewhat domineering and managing lady for standing for a long time after dinner.

No record of King Edward's voice is among the many gramophone records of the voices of famous men preserved at the British Museum. The omission is singular, and the regret is made all the keener by the knowledge that less than a couple of years ago arrangements for taking a record were all but completed.

After some hesitation the King had at last been induced to consent to speak for posterity, the choice of a date was all that was left to be settled; and then a prodder of State business intervened, and the fixing of an appointment was postponed. It was never granted.

The Queen Mother's voice, too, is not yet preserved, nor indeed is that of any member of the royal family.

It is estimated that nearly two hundred biplane cameras were busy recording the passing of King Edward's funeral procession and that 60,000 feet of film were exposed.

America looked to British firms to supply the market by the quickest liner, but from the Continent there came about fifty camera operators, who obtained, mainly by purchase, likely positions providing views of the procession.

Some of the English newspapers, headed by the Times, are trying to introduce the word "aeroman" to replace "aviator" for one who travels through the air, defending their nomenclature by the analogy with "seaman." If the analogy were carried a little further travelers by the underground railways should be known as "earthmen."

The latest craze for airmen and aerobells these designations for aviators have really caught on here—the aerial being not planned, as the French call it, but such judgment and nerve does the feat require that only Paulhan and one or two other famous airmen have as yet attempted it.

Mounting to a great height, the aviator cuts off the ignition of his engine, thus "choking" himself of all motive power; points his elevating plane airward, and comes diving down at a speed approaching 100 miles an hour.

Non-conformist churches and chapels in London seem to be passing through a period of depression. The rich supporters are getting fewer and fewer and the poorer members of the congregations are unable to keep the chapels going without financial aid from outside.

Rowland Hill's old chapel on Blackfriars road is now a boxing hall, and the Sutherland Chapel on Walworth road has been turned into a cinematograph theatre. Now the announcement comes that owing to financial straits the communion plate of the Pilgrim Fathers Chapel on Old Kent road is to be sold by auction.

For years past times have been bad for this old chapel, and the communion plate is being sold to enable the trustees to meet mortgage payments. The plate is said to have been presented to the chapel by Jonathan Owen, a Congregational pioneer. The old chapel dates from 1616.

An unexpected result of the passing of the finance bill is to increase the charge for hotel lodgings. The Manchester Hotel Association at its last meeting decided that to meet the increase in charges, the raising of the cost of licenses and the increased duties on beer and spirits, bedrooms are to cost an extra sixpence (2 cents) a night in all hotels belonging to the association on and after May 23.

The hotel managers explain that they could not put any of the extra cost on food and they had learned by experience that any increase in the liquor prices would only have the effect of decreasing the consumption, so there was nothing to do but to raise the bedroom tariff. The present increase, it was hinted, is only by way of a beginning and an advance of a shilling (25 cents) may soon be expected, at least for higher priced bedrooms.

The revised tariff is expected to be adopted throughout the country generally.

Mme. Cecil Sorel, the actress who is described as the best dressed woman in Paris, she holds that $20,000 a year is the lowest sum on which a woman can clothe herself without a loss of self-respect—has adopted a new hobby. At her flat in the Avenue des Champs Elysees she keeps two lions, and from contemplation of her green eyed pets she has evolved a scheme of philosophy, which as the following extracts show is tinged with misanthropy.

"Lions are animals and that is already a reason why their society appears to me superior to that of the company of men."

"Washed out, nerve wrecked by civilization, man has lost the sense of instinct; and it is from instinct that comes all true nobility. It is because of the loss of it that men possess no longer the heroic virtues, those which make breathe to beat and fire the spirit."

"The greatest among men nowadays, the artists and thinkers give by the flash of their genius the illusion of a temporary sovereignty; but their materialism and the attitude to which civilization has reduced them, civilization which levels down all middle sized people, is a deception."

"Lions keep the promise which their aspect gives. Mine have the serenity of strong natures. Their carriage is naturally haughty and through their half-closed eyes they shed a sovereign content on things which surround them. No human events can alter the calm serenity of animals."

"Men who command others, either by instinct or their functions, are the only ones who have preserved a scrap of instinct. Of all men, kings are most like lions. They have learned the art to live among men and yet not be of them. They let them approach, but draw a line past which they must not go."

Much jubilation marks the announcement in the English press that "despite strong American competition, Messrs. Griffiths & Co., of London, have secured the contract for the southern section of the new longitudinal railway in Chile."

The length of the line to be constructed is 600 miles, through very mountainous country. It will run from Cabildo to Toledo, a little south of Copiapo. The line will connect seven transversal railways, and in due course will form a section of the Pan-American Railway.

The extent of the work may be realized from the following figures: Earthwork to be moved, 40,000,000 tons. Weight of rails to be laid down, 25,100 tons. Number of ties, 1,000,000. Length of tunnels to be constructed, 51.3 miles. Length of bridges, 3 miles. Number of locomotives to be built, 50. Number of wagons, 300. Number of passenger carriages, 30.

About 7,000 men will be required for the work, and it is probable that some of the labor will have to be imported. When the railway is finished Messrs. Griffiths & Co. will leave it to the Chilean Government for thirty-six years.

A court-martial sitting at Glogau in Prussian Silesia has sentenced a non-commissioned officer, Franz Libowska, to two years imprisonment and degradation for perpetrating 200 acts of cruelty on members of the Fifth Battalion of Sappers. The evidence showed that Libowska hit a recruit's head fifty times in succession and then struck his victim in the face with the flat of his sword. Libowska also maltreated the same recruit by kicking his head with heavy knee boots.

Another recruit received thirty blows in succession on the head and face, and Libowska dug his nails so deeply into the unhappy soldier's cheek that blood was drawn. Many recruits and young soldiers had to submit to having their hair pulled out of their heads.

One of Libowska's habits was to throw bags of cartridges, swords and similar missiles at the men's heads while they were cleaning the barracks. He once compelled his men when drilling to hit one another on the head while he looked on and enjoyed the combat. After a hard day's drill he would compel the men to get up at night and sing to him. Those whose voices or songs displeased him were beaten and systematically ill-treated on the following days.

In many cases Libowska forced his men to lend him money, which he never repaid.

The military requirements of the dual monarchy have been repeatedly referred to in the last few months in both the Austrian and Hungarian Parliaments and have again come to the front through a joint Ministerial conference held at Budapest. A naval plan is to be laid before both delegations, which meet late in the autumn, to defray the cost of which $20,000,000 will be needed.

The naval authorities desire four dreadnoughts, the cost of which is estimated at $47,000,000, besides three new fast cruisers, four new submarine guardships, from four to six submarine craft and ten to twelve destroyers and ocean-going torpedo boats should be built. In addition must be reckoned the demands for the common army, also the cost involved in introducing two years' service, which cannot be long delayed. It must not be forgotten that the entire military costs of the annexation are not yet quite covered.

At this joint Ministerial conference both the Austrian and the Hungarian Finance Ministers dwell upon the unfavorable state of the exchequer, which will necessitate the limiting of the building of dreadnoughts to the smallest possible measure and cause the distribution and completion of these vessels.

Store Your Furs.

Unmatchable China and Glassware.

Sale of Prices That Seem Impossible and Quantities That Are Enormous in Our Summer Sale.

BECAUSE WE MAKE CHINA AND CUT GLASS of famously fine quality in our factories here and abroad, we can afford to sell at prices quite impossible for other stores, as we eliminate the middleman's profit from our prices. That is why our regular everyday offers represent the same value giving as often heralded by other stores as unusual. When a great event like this occurs, therefore, an event planned to meet the needs of those fitting out summer homes, the prices must be extraordinary indeed. Other makers are attracted by our unrivaled distributing facilities, and make great concession to be represented in such an event. Space permits the mentioning of but a few examples of values, but you will find Brooklyn's largest and best China and Glassware Store brimming over with bargains in the very best sense of that much abused word.
